CHAPTER I.

I had known him from a boy; we had been flogged together at school, we had been placked together at college; together we had entered London life; together we ad borne disappointments and celebrated victories; together we had sworn always to live, and had determined to hold ever saured the "love that passeth the love of women." My name was Smith, but with true Johnsonian wit he called me "Smy;" his was Augustus De Vere, which it seemed almost profunity to shorten, as I did into "Oggy," and sometimes "Devy." No cloud had ever come between us before the dreadful day I write of; and that—

But I anticipate. The London sesson was over; DeVero had danced with such praiseworthy energy that his bootmaker's claims became considerable; whilst I, who confined my gayety principally to loung-ing in the park, had had differences with ny tailor, so serious as to render a shor bsence from England desirable.

"Tompkins! some brandy and scda," I heard a voice, half stilled by the bed-clothes, murmur.
"It is not Tompkins," I replied; "and brandy and soda is bad for you. Listen "

He turned lazily in his bed. "I won't He turned lazily in his bed. "I won't listen without a brand—"
"You shall!" and I sat down upon his feet suddenly. "Oggy, I have an idea!"
"Impossible!" he exclaimed, and appearpeared to wake up at this announcement.

"Abroad—why?"
"Bootmuker—tailor—season over."

"Germany. I want to go to Bonn, to see a 'schlager' match. It is on, Smy?"
"It is," I said, and we grasped cach other's hands. Thus was the first act played in th fearrul drama I have to recount.

vulgarly said they did. The journey to Cologne was uneventful.

The Hotel Disch was bad, but, as De Vere said, the hotel dishes were worse. My exact that the time was fast approaching when—but again I anticipate.

At Bonn we went to the "Stern," as De

Vere insisted on it; he said (having con-sulted a dictionary) that there we should nt least, there were a great many, but there was only one for us. In that one family there were two daughters-one lovely as the day the other ugly as the-the night isn't particularly ugly—I never can rind a simile! The pretty one was Emily, the ugly one was June. Jane was the oldest—Jano Grey, as De Vere called her—she being well-stricken in years and snowy about the head, and he thinking be knowy about the head, and he thinking he knew some history. The parents were very old, and had about six teeth between them. How they managed at the table d'hote I cannot tell, but I suppose the six teeth were real good ones. The family's surname was Moppin—an old name, Jone told us; its derivation, the fact of their founder using his handkerchief to his face, after laying contract seventeen for iffed

We both fell in love with Emily, or rather slid into it, after meeting her every day for a week at the table a hote. It was a fearful crisis. I could not stiffs the beatings of my heart. I could not lose my friend. What was I to do?

CHAPTER III. "Tomkins!" said Do Vere, about a week after our arrival at the student town, "where's my umbrella?"
"Did you bring it 'ome last night, sir?" said Tomkins, looking up at the centing for it.
"Of course I did," said Do Vere, and Tomkins transferred his gaze to the win dow-punes.

"I loved that umbrolla," said Do Vere. "I loved that imbrolla," said Do Vere, sadly. "Do you know where it is, Smy?" "No," said-I; "how should I?" "Could I have left it in the Moppins' rooms?" he said musingly.
"With my heart," I murmured, senti-entally. "With your what?" he asked—he is so "Nothing," and I sighed; but what a gh, "Tomking," said Do Vere, again, "I won't lose that unbrella."

"No, sir," said Tomkins, and this time seemed to look for it in the fire-place.

"Go to Mr. Moppin, and ask him, with my compliments, if I left it in his room."

"Yes, sir," and with one despairing glance at the ceiling, Tomkins departed. He returned—the umbrella was not to be found. se that umbrella.

"I must have one," said De Vere; and sallying out, he bought a new one, with a great deal of handle and very little silk to We dined that night with the Moppins, in their own rooms—a dream of pleasure only spoiled by De Verc's bad jokes, which I could see Emily did not appreciate. No.

"D—n your umbrealla?" I exclaimed with energy, and he walked haughtily from my room.
"My Emily—my Emily—my Emily!
My umbrella—my umbrella!" I murmured to myself, as I fell fast asleep. CHAPTER IV.

We scarcely spoke at breakfast next morning. De Vere was cold and haughty, and I—what cared I for him, or a thousand umbrellas? Was there not always Emily? Ah, Emily! (I could write a beautiful rhapsody here, but space forbids.) I lunched with the Moppins. There was something odd about the manners of the family, and Jane appeared to watch her sister in a way I thought quite inconsist—we may be sufficiently a gang of robbers who sister in a way I thought quite inconsistent with good breeding.

Do Vere and Smith) were not friends yet; he had an Englishman's love for his umbralla, and I had slighted that love. I made up my mind to opoligize that night, as I turned over the music for my angel at the cracked lodging house piane, and watched him making bud jokes to the grizzled Jane, who—poor old thing!

—certainly made a good pretence of laughing at them. Happiness! If cutting at one's best friend with a girl be not happiness, I know not what is—'tis Elysium!

The journey through the Catacombs is a very tedious one, and the damp and cold air is often attended with unwholesome effects. The temperature is, for the most part, colder than on the lieart to interfere with the pleasure of the accomplished fair ones. We record this incident to show what keen interest is felt by true-hearted women—those for whom we labor and whom we indoize—in exhibitions of speed at agricultural fairs. Bigoted journals may preach against the "abomination," but the preaching practically amounts to noning. The people laugh at the doloful and spizeful hossilies, and, when they go to a fair they rush to the speeding truck the unment that arace is announced to take place. EARTH CLOSETS.

IMPORTANT TO ALL.

The Earth Closet is a perfect substitute for the WAT! R CLOSET. It may be used in any room, or m be substituted for the COMMON PRIVY.

It is suodorous, theap and Simple.

The following letter to the Buffalo agents of the Earth-Closet Company was written by the Rev. A. H. Lewis, of Alfred Centre, New York, under dute of May 3, 1870.

"I have Earth-Closet fixtures of the 'Pull-up' pattern, put up in the form of a permanent commode over a simple box which holds about one barrel, and can be emptied with a shovel when ever it is desired. The expense, beyond the cost of fixtures, was about one day's work by a carpenter, and the little lumber needed—much less than even an out-door closet of the old offen sive style.

It has been in constant use since November last by a family of four or five persons, the confourned by the family furnishing all the earth re-burned by the family furnishing all the earth required.

"The results may be summed up as follows:
I—About one barrel per mouth of superior fertilizing material. 2—The absence of all incomvenience from snow, well, or exposure of any kind incident to an out-door closet, and of all oftenive odors incident to an out-door closet, and of all oftenive odors incident to the ordinary 'water-losers."

"In short, after a trial of six or seven months, I can heartily recommend the 'Dry-Earth Syem' as being the cheapers, most effective, most convenient, and healthiest method with which I am acquainted. I would not exchange my cottimode for a water-closet gratis, and an out-door privy is not to be mentioned."
